what an honour

Summary

The world should have protected you, but you have been asked to protect it. What an honor.
What an injustice.

Your name is Timothy Drake. You're twelve, fifty-five inches and eighty pounds. You come from a reasonably wealthy family, so you attend a prestigious boarding school, but aside from that, you're fairly normal; plain, even. Your hobby is photography and your favourite flavour is grape.

You also have a secret.

Know a secret, rather.

You know Batman's identity.

It's been two weeks since the last time Robin has been seen on Gotham streets.

It's been two weeks since the grim announcement of Jason Todd-Wayne's death.

It's been two weeks since the Batman began filling emergency rooms of local hospitals with criminals beaten half to death every night.

You're convinced that if nothing is done, Batman himself will turn into a villain. It would be a disaster for the protector of Gotham to become a murderer. The hero that promised to watch over the city, and children like you, now needs someone to watch over him.

You tried contacting Nightwing to convince him to come back. But he is stubborn. He's also more concerned with how much you know about them. There's nobody else who knows their secret, after all.

There's nobody else you can turn to. The only one that can do it... is you.

Your name is Timothy Drake. You're twelve, and you suddenly realize that the fate of the entire city just landed on your shoulders.

What an honour. What an injustice.

Your name is Timothy Drake. You're Robin.
